So which types of medicines most commonly cause sweating and body odor? To begin, a handful of antidepressant medications can cause sweating [source: Bupropion hydrochloride Wellbutrin may cause body odor, in addition to excessive sweating in some patients. It's important to note that excessive sweating from medications that do not list sweating as a side effect may signify a more serious health condition that accompanies the use of antidepressant drugs.

You should tell your doctor about any side effects you experience. Though uncommon, some individuals experience an increase in sweating from Nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drugs NSAIDs -- drugs used to treat inflammation and pain. These side effects are reported for ketoprofen and naproxen Naprosyn. Neurons eventually adapt to the current level of neurotransmitters, and symptoms that range from mild to distressing may arise if the level changes too much too fast — for example, because you've suddenly stopped taking your antidepressant.

They're generally not medically dangerous but may be uncomfortable. Among the newer antidepressants, those that influence the serotonin system — selective serotonin reuptake inhibitors SSRIs, now commonly known as SRIs and serotonin-norepinephrine reuptake inhibitors SNRIs — are associated with a number of withdrawal symptoms, often called antidepressant or SRI discontinuation syndrome. Stopping antidepressants such as bupropion Wellbutrin that do not affect serotonin systems — dopamine and norepinephrine reuptake inhibitors — seems less troublesome over all, although some patients develop extreme irritability.

Having discontinuation symptoms doesn't mean you're addicted to your antidepressant. A person who is addicted craves the drug and often needs increasingly higher doses. Few people who take antidepressants develop a craving or feel a need to increase the dose. Sometimes an SRI will stop working — a phenomenon called "Prozac poop-out" — which may necessitate increasing the dose or adding another drug. Discontinuation symptoms can include anxiety and depression.

Since these may be the reason you were prescribed antidepressants in the first place, their reappearance may suggest that you're having a relapse and need ongoing treatment. Here's how to distinguish discontinuation symptoms from relapse:. Discontinuation symptoms emerge within days to weeks of stopping the medication or lowering the dose, whereas relapse symptoms develop later and more gradually.

Discontinuation symptoms often include physical complaints that aren't commonly found in depression, such as dizziness, flu-like symptoms, and abnormal sensations. Discontinuation symptoms disappear quickly if you take a dose of the antidepressant, while drug treatment of depression itself takes weeks to work. Discontinuation symptoms resolve as the body readjusts, while recurrent depression continues and may get worse.

If symptoms last more than a month and are worsening, it's worth considering whether you're having a relapse of depression. Neurotransmitters act throughout the body, and you may experience physical as well as mental effects when you stop taking antidepressants or lower the dose too fast.
