Wellbutrin Smells Like Sulfur Smelling

By Im71 , March 31, in Wellbutrin bupropion. Also, has anyone gotten a bad batch of Watson's bupropion lately? My last refill of them smelled bad strongly and the last 2 weeks since I refilled it I've been pretty unstable, up and down like a roller coaster, and appetite suppression fades in and out, days no appetite, then days of emotional cravings, then back again - very stressing. The last two refills of them worked beautifully for my depression and I've lost about 20 lbs since the end of January, not sure what happened with this last refill that destabilized everything so much.

I've never had a problem with any Watson meds before. I found this paragraph in a different post. I just recently refilled a script at walmart for wellbutrin and have been having the same symptoms as noted above. I was wondering if this could just be an adjustment period, and how long to expect this to last? Did your refill smell bad, too? I would keep going up the management line at Walmart until they took it back. Geez, do we have to threaten to go to the media or have a laboratory assay performed to get them to listen to us??

You'd think they would have made enough profit to absorb the occasional return. YES, everything you describe! Watsons had worked beautifully since July, and the last month or so has been a nightmare. I thought I was losing it. I've also been super sad and grumpy in the mornings, which is also not the norm. I don't recall a bad smell but wasn't looking for one, plus the bupes have always smelled a little funky.

What dosage were you taking? I'd assumed the switch had something to do with it, but maybe a whole batch of Watson pill glop has gone awry. Anyone else experiencing anything like this? I'd love to bounce it off my doc tomorrow and see what he thinks. My mornings have been abysmal the past couple of weeks. Sleeping longer again, craving food again, anxiety again, negativity, hopeless, etc.

Then the next day mood would be "ok" but still wanting to eat. Then the day after that everything swings down hard again. I got fed up and was about to call for the XL version hoping for some stability. It didn't occur to me that it might be bad batch until the day before I switched brands I smelled the Watsons again and it smelled worse stronger. My first Watsons had an odor, I assumed it was the time-release coating or something, but nothing unpleasant really.

The day I switched it smelled like something I no longer wanted to take. I switched brands to Actavis, also from Walmart and am waiting a week or two to make my mind up about the new ones. Two days in, so far so good better all around. These are light yellow and have no odor whatsoever. Okay, I just got another Watson refill, but ditched the SRs and went back to the s, because they worked so well before. I also brought the suspect pills along, and both the doctor and the pharmacist seemed surprised by how rank they smelled.

The bupropion always had a weak sulfurous odor, but this last batch actually edged into rotten-egg territory. The new ones don't smell nearly as rancid, so I'll give them a try and hope that all goes back to normal. Our insurance provider will positively crap a brick over the switch, but whatever. I don't know how long until any change might become obvious, but would be interested in hearing if anyone else swaps manufacturers and feels better, worse or the same. Right, mine always had a distinct smell too, but not strong or offensive.

Just a mild distinctness. The smell would dissipate soon after opening, so the strength of the smell buildup seems gaseous in what it's doing, something breaking down chemically. Most definitely smells like something you do NOT want to put into your body. So far I feel much much better and more stable emotionally and in appetite suppression after the brand switch. Kidneys seem to be working mostly normal again too. Very slight headache for a few minutes a couple of times.

So far I like Actavis' bupropion. Still early though, not passing a full verdict on it yet for a couple of weeks. I'm new to this discussion and curious about people's experiences on generic Wellbutrin, including Watson. I've been taking bupropion for about seven weeks, and just switched to Watson mg twice a day. I had been on Mylan and experienced terrible side effects anxiety, palpitations, night sweats, chest pain, shortness of breath for a couple of weeks until stabilizing at mg per day. My doctor wanted me to try mg and I asked for the SR because taking a pill three times a day sounded annoying.

My pharmacy gave me the Sandoz brand, and immediately my anxiety went away. However, while the Mylans suppressed my appetite, on Sandoz I was starving all the time. I took it for ten days before giving up and getting a refill at another pharmacy as I'd read that different generics have different side effects. I've been on the Watsons for four days and still have a ravenous appetite- a really uncomfortable, incessant gnawing feeling in my stomach that doesn't go away even after I eat.

Otherwise, I haven't experienced negative side effects, though I seem to be a little more tired during the day than I was on the Mylans. I'm considering going back to Mylan and seeing if the anxiety subsides because the constant hunger is really distracting, and I don't want to gain a ton of weight! Has anyone else experienced this, and if so, how did you deal with it?
